aa2 windows 10Q: Javascript + Ajax: saving the response as a global variable so I want to save the value returned from an ajax call (within the ajax call, it's not much) into a global variable, using `window.variable_name`. The code that would get the desired value looks like this: `var ajaxValue = window.variable_name`; What actually happens: The returned value gets stored in `ajaxValue` without any errors, but when I try to use it, it gives me undefined. A: If you want to use this inside the returned script, it will be available by `$(this)`, but outside of it (using the window) it will simply be undefined, which is because this refers to the global object. If you want to be able to use the code outside of the returned script, then it will need to be an object (with a get property). Something like this: `(function() { var myValue = 1; $(document).ajaxComplete(function() { window.myValue = myValue; }); }());` Now `myValue` can be accessed outside the returned script, and be assigned to an object. A:

Remember, the script returned to your jQuery isn't going to have any kind of variable scope. So you can just put the variable declaration outside of the ajax call: var ajaxValue; // place this outside ajax call $('#mydiv').load('path/to/my/script'); Then inside the returned ajax call: $(this).html(ajaxValue);

A class-action lawsuit filed by a former Royal Canadian Legion branch president charged RCMP officers with extortion and assault has been sealed on the national police force's orders and will not be released in the public domain, RCMP sources told the Toronto Star. In 2011, four officers from the Whitchurch-Stouffville detachment of the RCMP—which oversees the local legion branch—searched the home and belongings of former president Ted Hall, a victim in the case. Hall was charged on Oct. 11, 2011, with assaulting one RCMP officer by “vomiting in the officer’s face” and
