I hate to be “that guy” but there is a severe flaw in the “all life is precious” hypothesis. An error that it seems all too willing to take as the “default” account of Animal Life. The flaw in this “all life is precious” stance is the assumption that Animal Life is but a single reason for existence. “Animal Life” in the face of a clear and present danger to the entire species (in this case human life) becomes a false idol. We are all well aware of the “Evolution of Human Violence” factoid. It is that the human capacity for slaughtering animals and eating them is but one piece of the puzzle. I believe that one can make an argument that the equation is more than that: that Human Violence is a direct result of the Human – Animal Bloc. I think that we can make the argument based on what we see around us, with which we are all familiar: that we see the results of violent acts on a daily basis. We also see that Animal Life is more than merely a link in the evolution of the Human, and actually an integral part of the Human species. I think that we have
